Read the book to the students. Read the text and listen to them, and ask them to predict what they think the story might be about. After they respond, read the book to them, asking them to read along whenever they want to. Then, begin the process of using a story map to discuss the story elements. Discuss with them the elements of "setting." Explain to them what the word setting means if needed, and then write down whenever they tell you for the setting. Repeat the process with "characters." Then explain to the students that their book is about how a shape "travels." Show them some what they predict each event will be, and write down their responses. Finally, give the students the opportunity to come up with their own ideas.

After they finish each event to be, and write down their responses. Finally, give the students the opportunity to come up with their own ideas.

Some of these stories, by specifically pointing out the elements of a story map, the students will begin to understand how stories are written.

Illustrated with the student, it shows how the triangle changes shape and why. The student's drawing and writing are shown in the picture.

In Search of a Shape: Shape With Social Studies

To address a social studies lesson, compare and contrast natural shapes.

Go for a walk in search of a shape in your neighborhood. Look closely at things around you and bring a camera along to capture the shapes you see. Put the pictures into PowerPoint and outline the shapes. What shapes are most common? Where are shapes found in nature? What is water, finding shapes in nature or human-made structures? Design a shape that is made out of only one shape. Draw a picture and write about the shape.
