SCIENTIFIC METHOD READING COMPREHENSION

Does coffee actually wake you up?

DATE: _____

Have you ever wondered if coffee really helps people wake up in the morning, or if it's just in their head? That's a great question for using the scientific method! Scientists use this process to investigate mysteries about the world, and it all begins with curiosity—just like this. Once you have a question, the next step is to do some research. You might look up how long it stays in the body, or whether it's been shown to help you understand the topic and plan your experiment. After researching, it's time to come up with a hypothesis. An educated guess based on what you've learned, your hypothesis might be: "If someone drinks coffee in the morning, they will be more awake compared to someone who doesn't." What you think will happen. Now, you're ready to run the experiment.

To run the experiment, you need two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group does not drink coffee in the morning. The experimental group drinks coffee in the morning. The thing you change between the groups is the independent variable. The thing you measure is the dependent variable. The thing you measure is how fast they respond to questions—is the dependent variable. To keep everything else the same, like what time they sleep.

During the experiment, scientists make observations and collect data. Maybe they ask participants to rate their alertness on a reaction-time test. After collecting enough data, the conclusion tells you whether your hypothesis was correct. If the experimental group did better, then maybe your hypothesis was right. If there was much difference, you might have to rethink your hypothesis. That's the power of the scientific method: it helps you understand the world around us.

4. The control group did not change their eating habits, while the experimental group ate one apple every day.
