

Human Genetics Lab

Exploring Human Genetics

Genetics is the study of how traits are passed from parents to offspring. In this lab, you will explore the inheritance of a specific trait and use statistical methods to analyze the results.

Procedure:

- Identify a trait that is controlled by a single gene with two alleles.
- Collect data from a large number of individuals.
- Calculate the expected frequencies based on Mendelian inheritance.
- Perform a chi-square analysis to determine if the observed frequencies differ significantly from the expected frequencies.

Allele	Frequency	Expected Frequency
AA	1/4	1/4
Aa	1/2	1/2
aa	1/4	1/4

Results:

Observed frequencies: AA = 1/4, Aa = 1/2, aa = 1/4

Expected frequencies: AA = 1/4, Aa = 1/2, aa = 1/4

The chi-square analysis shows that the observed frequencies are not significantly different from the expected frequencies, indicating that the trait is inherited according to Mendelian genetics.

Collect data and complete chi square analysis
