Jobcentre Plus Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Committee of Public Accounts, 2007-10-09 This report follows on from a earlier NAO report HCP 24 session 2006 07 ISBN 9780102943795 Personal Advisers assess needs of people looking for work and point them towards the right kind of assistance needed to find a job In 2005 06 Jobcentre Plus had some 9 300 advisers at a salary cost of 238 million conducting in total 10 8 million jobseeker interviews They are also the gateway to various New Deal programmes which has cost 5 billion since 1997 With the Government s aim of increasing the employment rate to 80% personal advisers will have an important role The Committee has set out a number of conclusions and recommendations including that the Department for Work and Pensions aim of assisting 1 million people on benefit into work will require Jobcentre Plus to keep a good knowledge of employers short and medium term skill needs as well as training opportunities Jobcentre Plus should take care to protect advisers from unnecessary administrative work interruptions of interviews to a minimum and allow more discretion and flexibility to advisers on individual cases in 2005 06 customers failed to attend around 1 8 million scheduled interviews whilst customers turned up late on average for around one in six interviews Jobcentre Plus could do more to remind customers of their responsibilities but also take account of local transport needs and use text messages and phone calls to remind customers of appointment times improving the amount of time personal advisers spend with customers is a key element in helping Jobcentre Plus in achieving its efficiency targets and in helping it to be effective in achieving organisational objectives of helping people find work House of Commons - Education Committee: Foundation Years: Sure Start Children's Centres - HC 346-I Great Britain: Parliament: House of Commons: Education Committee, 2013-12-17 The Government needs to prove that it is serious about closing the attainment gap for disadvantaged children by setting out coherent long term thinking on early years and children s centres Ministers should start by making clear the Government s strategy for realising its aspiration to put in place a highly qualified workforce with equal pay and status between early years teachers and those in primary schools The Government also needs to be clear what children s centres should be offering and who they are for The Committee identified three different types of centres but this is not reflected in current policy They also found that the stated core purpose is far too vague and broad The core purpose needs to focus on achievable outcomes and reflect the difference between centres especially where they do not offer early education or childcare Stronger accountability is needed for how well individual children s centres perform and critically for how effectively local authorities use children centres to improve outcomes for children in their areas Closing children s centres should go ahead only after proper consultation and where alternative options have been considered While some changes may make the network as a whole more effective it should be up to local authorities to decide how best to organise and commission services Funding pressures mean some targeting of services is inevitable but all families should be able to access the services they need and that universal services of some sort play a significant part in encouraging families to engage in the first place
