|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|
| What are Matching-type tests? | A type of test that consists of two columns. This type of test is best used in assessing the knowledge students gained from the topic. |
| What levels of thinking can be assessed using this test type? | Knowledge and comprehension. |
| At least how many columns does this test type have? | 2 columns |
| Give at least three of the best advantages of Matching-type tests. | It can cover a large amount of content It allows for great flexibility and accuracy in counting the score of the learners. It gives an objective assessment of the learners' knowledge. |
| Give at least three limitations of Matching-type tests that most teachers should take note of. | It is ill-suited for gauging the learners' higher understanding (analysis and synthesis level). Introducing too many options can make it so that the question tests the ability to search first, relevant knowledge second. This type of test is mostly easily applied in elementary level and has a little usage for High School or College Examinations. |
| Why is it that the entries of matching-type tests must be homogenous? | It must be homogenous because it covers one lesson topic only. All of the premises and options should be in one category. |
| How will you arrange your item placement if you will decide on a matching-type test? | All should be placed in Column A, and the options or answers should be placed in Column B. |
| TRUE or FALSE: A test type with at least 5 options are matching-type tests. | FALSE |
| TRUE or FALSE: A teacher can name the columns with any element that he/she likes. | FALSE |
| TRUE or FALSE: Short-answer items | TRUE |
