Renewable vs. Nonrenewable

Natural resources are things, materials, substances and components found in the natural environment. They exist “naturally” or innately in the world and are not the result of human manipulation or creation. There are two types of natural resources: renewable resources and nonrenewable resources.

Renewable resources can regenerate if they are alive or can be replenished by biochemical cycles if they are nonliving. Theoretically, there is an “infinite” amount of renewable resources. Water, sunlight, plants, animals and wind are examples of renewable resources.

Nonrenewable resources cannot be regenerated or replenished by natural processes. There is a finite amount of nonrenewable resources; once used up, they are forever gone. Minerals and metals are examples of nonrenewable resources. Fossil fuels are also nonrenewable resources. Technically, fossil fuels are continually being made. However, the process is extremely long and slow and we use fossil fuels MUCH faster than they are created. For this reason, we classify fossil fuels as a nonrenewable resource.

Renewable resources can become nonrenewable if they are used up faster than they can be replenished. If the resource no longer exists, there is nothing to regenerate or be replenished. For example, if we cut down trees faster than we grow them, trees can become a nonrenewable resource because there are no trees to regenerate.

Questions

1. What is a renewable resource?
2. What are examples of renewable resources?
3. How is a nonrenewable resource different from a renewable resource?
4. Are fossils fuels a renewable or nonrenewable resource? Explain your answer.
5. How can a renewable resource become a nonrenewable resource? Explain your answer.
