Niche Envy Joseph Turow, 2008-02-15 The price we pay for the new strategies in database marketing that closely track desirable customers offering them benefits in return for personal information We have all been to Web sites that welcome us by name offering us discounts deals or special access to content For the most part it feels good to be wanted to be valued as a customer But if we thought about it we might realize that we ve paid for this special status by turning over personal information to a company s database And we might wonder whether other customers get the same deals we get or something even better We might even feel stirrings of resentment toward customers more valued than we are In Niche Envy Joseph Turow examines the emergence of databases as marketing tools and the implications this may have for media advertising and society If the new goal of marketing is to customize commercial announcements according to a buyer s preferences and spending history or even by race gender and political opinions what does this mean for the twentieth century tradition of equal access to product information and how does it affect civic life Turow shows that these marketing techniques are not wholly new they have roots in direct marketing and product placement widely used decades ago and recently revived and reimagined by advertisers as part of customer relationship management known popularly as CRM He traces the transformation of marketing techniques online on television and in retail stores And he describes public reaction against database marketing pop up blockers spam filters commercial skipping video recorders and other ad evasion methods Polls show that the public is nervous about giving up personal data Meanwhile companies try to persuade the most desirable customers to trust them with their information in return for benefits Niche Envy tracks the marketing logic that got us to this uneasy impasse
