Kirchman,2018-07-05 Microbial ecology is the study of interactions among microbes in natural environments and their roles in biogeochemical cycles food web dynamics and the evolution of life Microbes are the most numerous organisms in the biosphere and mediate many critical reactions in elemental cycles and biogeochemical reactions Because they are essential players in the carbon cycle and related processes microbial ecology is a vital science for understanding the role of the biosphere in global warming and the response of natural ecosystems to climate change This second edition has been fully revised restructured and updated while remaining concise and accessible It discusses the major processes carried out by viruses bacteria fungi protozoa and other protists the microbes in freshwater marine and terrestrial ecosystems The focus is on biogeochemical processes starting with primary production and the initial fixation of carbon into cellular biomass before exploring how that carbon is degraded in both oxygen rich oxic and oxygen deficient anoxic environments These processes are in turn affected by ecological interactions including competition for limiting nutrients viral lysis and predation by various protists in soils and aquatic habitats The book neatly connects processes occurring at the micron scale to events happening at the global scale including the carbon cycle and its connection to climate change issues A final chapter is devoted to symbiosis and other relationships between microbes and larger organisms Microbes have huge impacts not only on biogeochemical cycles but also on the ecology and evolution of more complex forms of life including humans Catalogue of Protists--algae and Protozoa American Type Culture Collection,1993 Response and Adaptation of Terrestrial Ecosystem Carbon, Nitrogen, and Water Cycles to Climate Change in Arid Desert Regions Jianping Li,Kaibo Wang,Huang Lei ,Dafeng Hui,2025-10-24 The carbon nitrogen and water cycles within terrestrial ecosystems are three major themes in global change research Understanding the complex interactions of these cycles and their biological regulation mechanisms is vital at the frontiers of global change ecology also facilitating the accurate evaluation of the carbon budget of terrestrial ecosystems in the face of climate change scenarios Climate change and the resulting fluctuations in precipitation patterns have profoundly impacted the structure and function of terrestrial ecosystems Among the ecosystems arid regions comprising deserts oases grasslands and mountain forests showcase a heightened sensitivity to moisture variations and demonstrate a more pronounced response to the transient changes in resource availability Climate change has significantly affected the cycling of carbon nitrogen and water within terrestrial ecosystems along with their intricate interrelationships Generally climate warming has notably increased soil nitrogen mineralization rates leading to enhanced nitrogen availability within the soil Current global carbon cycle models typically predict that climate warming will diminish the carbon sink capacity of terrestrial ecosystems Precipitation and nitrogen are key determinants of ecosystem productivity Their interaction markedly influences soil nitrogen cycling including nitrogen mineralization nitrogen loss and plant nitrogen uptake While there is a relatively comprehensive understanding of the biological mechanisms governing individual carbon nitrogen and water cycling within terrestrial ecosystems research has yet to fully delve into their coupled relationships Particularly limited are studies exploring these cycles across different geographical units within ecosystems their spatiotemporal dynamics and the regulatory roles of plants and soil microbes This Research Topic will emphasize the characteristics of geographical independence and interconnection among deserts sand dunes oases grasslands and mountainous areas in arid regions The main theme will center on the carbon nitrogen and water cycling within arid ecosystems adopting an interdisciplinary and multi scale research approach It will encompass research from the organ individual community and ecosystem levels extending to regional and inter regional scales across various geographical units The aim is to investigate the processes mechanisms and regulation of carbon nitrogen and water cycles in arid ecosystems under the context of climate change We encourage submissions of any article type on the following sub topics although other relevant contributions are also welcome Mechanisms of adaptive feedback of plant organs individuals communities and ecosystems in arid regions Connectivity and driving mechanisms of carbon nitrogen and water cycles in arid ecosystems Scaling effects and functional mechanisms of plant water relations in arid regions Ecological and hydrological processes in revegetated desert ecosystems Water conservation functions of mountain forests in arid regions
