Read the book to the students (read the text and listen to them) and ask them to predict what they think the story might be about. After they respond, read the book to them, asking them to read along whenever they want to. Then, begin the process of using a story map to discuss the story elements. Discuss with them the elements of "setting." Explain to them what the word setting means if needed, and then write down whenever they tell you for the setting. Repeat the process with "characters." Then explain to the students that their book is about how a shape "travels." Have them discuss what they predict each event will be, and write down their responses. Finally, give the students the opportunity to come up with their own ideas.

After reading the book, discuss the story's elements. Make sure that the story begins and ends in the same place.

Constructing a circle story. After identifying the story's elements, the students can discuss each event in their stories. They can draw their own circle stories in the story.

Then, identify the book's main idea. Discuss the main idea and the story's elements. They can draw their own circle stories in the story.

Some of these stories, by specifically pointing out the elements of a story map, the students will begin to understand how stories are written.

Illustrated with the student, a triangle shape making the book's shape. The student's name and age are written on the book's cover.

In Search of a Shape: Shape With Social Studies

To enhance a social studies lesson, compare and contrast different shapes.

Go for a walk in search of a shape in your neighborhood. Look closely at things around you and bring a camera along to capture the shapes you see. Put the pictures into a folder and make the shapes. When shapes are found, compare them to the shapes you found in nature. Which is better, finding shapes in nature or finding shapes in nature? Bring a camera along to capture the shapes you see. Put the pictures into a folder and make the shapes.
