Predictors of the Incidence and Charges for Lumbar Spinal Fusion Surgery in Florida Hospitals During 2010 Anna Ialynychyev,2013 Over the past several decades rates of spine surgeries in the U S have increased dramatically Spinal fusion surgery rates in particular have grown exponentially despite being one of the most costly invasive and controversial methods for treating patients suffering from back conditions Furthermore lumbar fusion surgeries continue to be performed at increasing rates despite a lack of scientific evidence and consensus that they are cost effective and produce better clinical outcomes than less radical treatment of lower back pain As a result large amounts of healthcare dollars continue to be invested in these costly procedures which are potentially dangerous and have questionable efficacy in terms of improving patient outcomes Importantly there is a lack of population studies in the literature on spinal fusion surgeries from a health services research perspective Therefore the present research is a population based study using an administrative database and includes patients of all ages and payer types The data used in the present study come from the

Florida Agency for Health Care Administration AHCA and include all hospitalizations in Florida in 2010 The objective of the study is to analyze the incidence of spinal fusion surgeries in Florida hospitals for patients of all ages and payer types by demographic variables to understand who gets these surgeries and for which conditions The first null hypothesis is that there are no statistically significant predictors of the incidence of lumbar lumbosacral dorsal dorsolumbar spinal fusion surgeries in Florida hospitals Logistic regression was used to analyze the incidence of fusion surgeries The binary dependent variable was coded as a 1 for all patients who were a case i e they received one of the five procedure codes being studied in the present research and a 0 for all patients who were controls meaning they did not receive any of the five fusion procedure codes
