

Love it or hate it, the cover letter often still plays a fundamental part in the hiring process. When carefully crafted, your cover letter should leave a hiring manager with a positive and memorable impression of you — something a resume alone won't always do.

From a recruitment standpoint, the cover letter serves as an opportunity to better understand a candidate's skills and qualifications, while also demonstrating their willingness to put in the extra effort.

Trouble is, writing about yourself and your accomplishments can often feel awkward. And as a result, the cover letter creation process can leave you staring at a blinking cursor for hours, days ... or worse, weeks.

But with job market competition and hiring timelines in mind, there's no room for this type of slow down. (You needed to get your name in the hat yesterday.)

That's why we put together five cover letter templates designed to serve as a starting point for your efforts. With the flexibility to tailor each template to your unique experience, you're bound to save yourself time and energy in the writing process — time that you can reallocate towards preparing for the slew of interviews you're sure to land.

To get started with these templates:

Copy & paste the text into your own document and edit to your heart's content.
