

3 Steps of basic legal research

1

Where to start? Ask yourself these questions.

What are the facts?

Gather the key facts — and write everything down!

What is the legal issue?

If you don't identify your actual legal issue, you won't know what to search for.

What is the jurisdiction?

Focus your research on the relevant jurisdiction.

2

Find primary sources of law to support legal argument

Secondary sources

Start with secondary sources since they've already done the work for you — and they cite primary sources of law you can use. They include:

Practice guides

Treatises

Legal articles and law journals

Primary sources of law

Case law

Statutes

Regulations

Headnotes & Key Numbers

More primary sources of law

Headnotes and Key Numbers can help you identify additional primary law.

3

Make sure you are using 'good' law

Use a citator, like KeyCite, to check your primary law

KeyCite can tell you if your case is still "good," including whether it has been overruled, reversed, questioned, or merely differentiated.

Why use KeyCite?

- It tells you if your law is still "good"
- It helps you find additional sources of law
- It helps you update your legal research
