

QUESTION 108

QUESTION: You are a system administrator who manages a network of servers. You are reviewing the logs of a server and notice that the server is receiving a large amount of traffic from a single IP address. What should you do?

- A. Block the IP address using a firewall rule.
- B. Investigate the source of the traffic to determine if it is a legitimate user.
- C. Ignore the traffic as it is likely a botnet attack.
- D. Report the incident to the appropriate authorities.

ANSWER:

ANSWER: B. Investigate the source of the traffic to determine if it is a legitimate user. This is the most appropriate action to take as it allows you to determine if the traffic is legitimate or if it is a botnet attack. Blocking the IP address using a firewall rule (A) is a reactive measure that may not be the best solution. Ignoring the traffic (C) is not a good idea as it may be a sign of a security issue. Reporting the incident to the appropriate authorities (D) is a good idea but should be done after you have investigated the source of the traffic.
