Chain Store Age, 1962 Introductory Algebra David Novak, 1983 Digest; Review of Reviews Incorporating Literary Digest, 1927 Good Housekeeping, 1930 Beyond Limitations Berni Gorski, 1979. Are the mentally retarded capable of creative expression in the visual arts? This book, which answers yes to this question, was conceived as a method of disseminating information on this relatively little-known subject. It is a unique book which shows rather than tells what has and can be done by those developmentally disabled persons usually categorized as the mentally retarded. Beyond Limitations, the creative art of the mentally retarded, contains a collection of original art work done by the mentally retarded, ranging from the mildly retarded to the severely and profoundly retarded, the autistic, and those with Down's syndrome. The art work itself, with a media range from wood and clay to crayons and felt-tipped pens, was gathered from various state training schools, special classes in public schools, and community programs in ten states. Each of the 121 black and white and two-color illustrations is accompanied by descriptive information, with the specific disability of the artist also noted. The author has done this from a positive point of view to show that labels are not necessarily limiting. Of special interest to the reader will be the contributions from teachers who have worked closely with the handicapped. They write informally about their individual approaches, experiences, and philosophy, a valuable addition to the essentially picture-book format of this text. The dynamic results, spontaneity, and excitement of the creative works of the mentally retarded, as shown in this book, will encourage administrators, teachers, and parents to involve the retarded in creative activities. As an art collection, the book will inspire those in charge of developing programs to explore new ways of reaching the handicapped, especially through the visual arts. This book, by no means a complete representation, illustrates that there is a vast quantity of creative art just waiting to be discovered.
