

ENDOCRINE system

works in concert with the nervous system to maintain homeostasis by releasing hormones to regulate various functions in the body. Hormones act on target cells to produce a specific effect (e.g. target cell response).

Glands

Endocrine glands - release hormones directly into the bloodstream.
Exocrine glands - release substances into ducts that lead to the outside of the body (e.g. sweat glands, salivary glands).

hormone ACTION • TARGET cells

When a hormone binds to its receptor, it triggers a signal transduction pathway that leads to a specific cellular response. This response can be as simple as opening an ion channel or as complex as activating a gene to produce a protein.

STERIOD • WATER SOLUBLE hormones

steroid

WATER soluble

lipid-soluble & non-polar. They can pass through the cell membrane directly. They bind to intracellular receptors and act as transcription factors.

They are water-soluble & polar. They cannot pass through the cell membrane directly. They bind to cell surface receptors and activate a signaling pathway.

process

- 1. Hormone binds to its receptor on the cell surface.
- 2. Receptor binds to intracellular proteins, forming a complex.
- 3. This complex activates a signaling pathway, leading to a specific cellular response.
- 4. The response can be as simple as opening an ion channel or as complex as activating a gene to produce a protein.
- 5. The hormone-receptor complex enters the nucleus to regulate gene expression.
- 6. The hormone-receptor complex acts as a transcription factor, binding to DNA and initiating the transcription of a gene.
- 7. The resulting mRNA is translated into a protein, which then exerts its effect on the cell.

REGULATION

hormone levels are regulated by negative feedback loops. For example, high levels of a hormone can inhibit the release of more of that hormone from the endocrine gland.
