La bomba de transferencia de combustible (E) extrae combustible del tanque (M) a través del filtro de combustible primario (A) manteniendo la presión del combustible. Una vez que el combustible es presurizado en la bomba de transferencia, que se desplaza a través del filtro final con un separador de agua (C) a la bomba de inyección de combustible (B). Aire y un exceso de combustible se extraen fuera del sistema en un filtro final a través de un aire sangrar-off de la válvula (D). Combustible se acumula entonces a través de una línea de retorno de combustible que está conectada a la válvula de retorno (F) en la bomba de inyección. Este combustible vuelve al depósito de combustible (G) después de pasar a través de un extractor de combustible.

La bomba de inyección de combustible aumenta la presión del combustible requerida para la inyección, se acumula este combustible a alta presión

A través de las conductas de suministro (presión) a las bobinas de inyección de combustible (H). Si hay un exceso de combustible en la bomba de inyección, se libera a través de una válvula de retorno y se devuelve al tanque. En la mayoría de las aplicaciones, este combustible se acumula a través de un extractor de combustible antes de volver al tanque de combustible. Algunas aplicaciones utilizan un extractor de combustible en el lado de alimentación del depósito de combustible.

Una vez que el combustible entra en la bocanilla de inyección (H), supera la presión del resorte en la válvula de la bocanilla y es forzado a salir de los pequeños orificios en la punta de la bocanilla. Este proceso atomiza el combustible, ya que entra en la cámara de combustión. El exceso de combustible desde las bocanillas se dirige a través de la línea de retorno de combustible (F) y sale por el retorno a la línea de combustible del tanque (G).
