

Writing a Book Review or Article Critique

WRITING A BOOK REVIEW OR ARTICLE CRITIQUE

A book review or article critique is a specialized form of academic writing in which a reviewer evaluates the contribution to knowledge of scholarly works such as academic books and journal articles. A book review or article critique, which usually ranges from 250 to 750 words, is not simply a summary. It is a critical assessment, analysis, or evaluation of a work. However, take care not to equate the word "critique" to cynicism and pessimism. As an advanced form of writing, it involves your skills in critical thinking and recognizing arguments. A book review or article critique is different in movie review that you see in a newspaper. Although movie reviews involve the analysis of one's work, they are written for a general audience and primarily aim to offer a persuasive opinion. An academic book review or article critique, on the other hand, addresses a more specific audience and usually offers a critical response to a published scholarly work. Moreover, book review must not be mistaken for book reports. Book reports focus on describing the plot, characters, or idea of a certain work.

Book and article reviewers do not just share mere opinion; rather, they use both proofs and logical reasoning to substantiate their opinions. They process ideas and theories, revisit and extend ideas in a specific field of study, and present analytical responses.
