DRAG RACING TRENDS

Building 10-second All-Motor Combinations

Turbocharged, nitrous enhanced, methanol fueled Honda engines are pounding out 600 to 800+ horsepower on regular basis these days. Tube chassis cars are knocking on the 7-second ET threshold. The easy horsepower gains are gone and now these ultra high output combinations are up against the physical limits of the fuel and airflow. Additional power is becoming extremely difficult to extract from these engines and the performance at the track has stabilized into the serious tuner contest to which drag racing inevitably evolves.

With that class of Honda power going beyond the reach of most enthusiasts, the "All-Motor" class has provided an exciting and creative outlet for the engineering talents of the Honda performance community. They're generating incredible amounts of power and drag strip performances out these naturally aspirated engines. The quicker All-motor cars are now running 10-second ETs with most posting low 11-second ETs. The competition is keen, the technology interesting and accessible. In short, it's the same combination that made super stock one of the great classes in NHRA drag racing.

Part of the allure of this class is the challenge of figuring out how to make the power without the use of nitrous oxide or using a supercharger or turbocharger. For these guys it's too easy to bolt on a nitrous kit and go fast. Their goal is to post quicker ETs than boosted combinations. They're after the bragging rights and style points that come with that territory.

We hooked up with Chris Whitfield and the crew of Hookups Import Tek for several sections of the book. Here we show a few images of his 10-second All-Motor class 2.0-liter CRX. It's a great little machine that displays some very smart and effective engineering; it really demonstrates the principles explained in the book. It's also one of the original street racers from the Ontario, California area where all this fun started. And just the like the original drag racers from the 1950s, today's street racers have moved on to racing at the track. If you want to see more go to the chapter on naturally aspirated combinations.

Hookup Import Tek specializes in engine swaps. They take an old-school/street machine approach to finishing details, including painting the block, use of domestic performance suppliers such as MSD, and so on. The motor mounts are HIT and are the same as used on the engine swaps on which the company is establishing its reputation.
