

Declaration of Independence

IN CONGRESS JULY 4, 1776

The unanimous Declaration of the thirteen united States of America

When in the course of these events we found ourselves obliged to declare the political association between Great Britain and these colonies, we declared our independence, and in the progress of the war, the spirit of opposition to the British Government, and of attachment to the American cause, became more and more manifest.

We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.

That to secure these rights, Governments are instituted among Men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, that whenever any Form of Government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the Right of the People to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new Government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to promote their Safety and Happiness. Prudence, indeed, dictates that Governments long established should not be changed for light and transient causes; and accordingly we have borne with them for a long time past, with a firm and patient attention to their present and future miseries, but now it is necessary that they should be thrown away and a new one be instituted in their stead, for we have submitted to a long train of abuses and usurpations, pursuing invariably the same arbitrary and oppressive course, in violation of the sacred and undeniable rights of the Colonies, which have, in a degree, never been tolerated by a just and virtuous People.
