

Feedback Mechanisms

How do organizations regulate complex systems through feedback mechanisms?

A feedback loop occurs when a process or system acts back upon itself, causing a change in the process. This can occur either directly or indirectly. For example, a company that produces a product may receive feedback from customers. This feedback can be used to improve the product, which in turn leads to a change in the company's reputation. This change in reputation can lead to a change in the company's sales, which in turn leads to a change in the company's profits. This is a simple example of a feedback loop. More complex feedback loops can be found in many other areas, such as in the natural world and in human organizations.
