SINIGANG

- 1. Consider stereotypical representations of women as the beloved, mothers, virgins, whores, and/or goddesses. Does the text refer to, uphold, or resist any of these stereotypes? How?

No, the story doesn't stand with those stereotypical representations but in the story reflects cheating and committing disloyalty, especially being a mistress to other family is a kind of treason they did. In the short story the father is committing adultery and looking for another woman which leads to a broken family and tainted relationships with family members. The story is not encouraging the readers to be one of the stereotypical representations.

- 2. What roles have been assigned to the men and women in the text? Are the roles stereotypical? Do gender roles conflict with personal desires?

The man who is Liza's father is the one who is having an affair with another woman named Sylvia and had a child with her. I think yes, since the roles of each characters in the story has a different characteristics that shows reality in the world because some people tend to cheat and being unfaithful to their loved ones. Yes, the conflict of the story is the fact that her father had an extramarital affair with another woman and consequently had a child that is because of the desire in his heart which tainted Liza's relationship to her father.
