

The Catholic Mass

In the Roman Catholic tradition, the main Sunday service is called the Mass. In some churches there are four or five masses said each Sunday, as well as during the week.

There is a common structure for every Mass and a priest of the Catholic Church must always lead it. The service will vary from week to week depending on the Church calendar, but the basic order always remains the same. The order of service is taken from a book called the lectionary.

The word 'Mass' refers to the whole service, while the word 'Eucharist' refers to the part of the service where the bread and wine are blessed and distributed. The Eucharist is offered to baptised Catholics.
