

4-2-2. General Description

The two axles, front and rear, are identical as far as the design of pinion and gear drive and differential gearing are concerned. The major difference in this limited sense lies in the shape of the housing. The major difference in the design of the housing may be regarded as consisting, speaking roughly, of supporting parts (side sleeves, differential housing and axle tubes) and drive transmitting parts (bevel pinion and gear, differential gearing and live axle shafts). In the front axle, only the bevel pinion, gear and differential gearing are taken up under the collective title of "differential".

The bevel gear drive is of hypoid design, pinion and gear have hypoid gear teeth. This means that the pinion is located slightly below the center of the bevel gear to permit the car body to be lowered in design, and that some twisting or sliding action occurs in tooth meshing between pinion and gear. Here lies the reason why use of hypoid gears is specified for the differential.

The differential pinions are used in the differential case to qualify the gearing for heavy-duty "differential" drive. A total of 8 gears—a drive pinion, a crown gear, two side gears and four pinions—are inside the differential housing. It is mounted on the differential carrier case bolted to the housing.

The differential is so constructed that the bevel pinion bearing preload is adjusted by tightening the bevel pinion nut to compress the spacer.
