

What forces shape the earth's crust?

Exogenic forces: -operating on crust -break down crust.

Endogenic forces: -operating under crust -build crust.

External forces

Weathering: Breaking down of rocks

Erosion: Transportation of weathered/rock materials

Deposition: Laying down of weathered rock materials

*Weathered rock materials consist of rocks, sand, mud & dust

*Scree: broken rock material on a slope

*Silt: very fine broken rock material transported by rivers

*River load: material transported by a river

Agents of weathering, erosion, and deposition:

- River activities
- Wind activities
- Glacier activities
- Wave activities

Types of weathering:

A. Physical: natural forces e.g. ice/water & temperature changes that break down rocks

1. Freeze thaw action:

-when water as a liquid freeze, it expands- if it happens in the cracks of rocks, the expansion breaks rocks apart.

-happens in continental climates with great temperature ranges

2. Exfoliation: flaking off the outer layers of rocks.

-occurs in dry areas, which has a big temperature range - day-time high temperatures cause rocks to expand, while cold night temperatures cause rocks to shrink

- this daily physical, size changes are limited to the outer layer of rock, which eventually flakes/peels off

- the flaking is due to a crack that develops between the outer layer and the part below it

Chemical weathering:

rock minerals chemically react with elements/compounds in air/water.

1. Carbonation -CO₂, from air pollution/organic soil material mixes with water to form a weak carbonic acid

-any rock that contains calcium dissolves in this acid and is carried away in solution

-occurs to a greater extent in colder, continental climates

2. Oxidation:

-metals in rocks are oxidized, - rusting when it mixes with O₂

-this weakens the rock and causes it to break down

3. Hydrolysis:

-a chemical reaction between water and silicates in granite sandstone

-silicates absorb H₂O to form clay which washes away

C. Biological weathering:

It includes all activities of all living organisms that breaks down rocks.

- Quarrying
- Mining
- Constructive works
- Deforestation

Landforms formed due to weathering of rivers.

1. Valley

-forms when a river (wind /glacier) breaks down, the softer rocks of a mountainous area

-valley is the lower part and the spur the higher parts, next to it

2. Waterfall

-when a river erodes the softer lower parts of a landscape and creates a cliff in its course

-the river runs over this cliff which is refer to as a waterfall.

3. Rapid

-the river erodes the softer surrounding rocks, causing the harder rock cropping out in its course

4. Gorge and Canyon

-these are deep, steep sided valleys in the upper course of a river

-a gorge's sides are cliffs that usually forms waterfalls

-may also form if the landscape is uplifted by internal forces

Landforms formed due to weathering and deposition in the middle & lower courses:

Meanders and oxbow lakes

1. Erosion causes the outside bends to get closer until there's only a small bit of land left between the bends which is called the neck.
2. The river usually breaks through this land, usually during a flood and the river flows along the shortest course.
3. Deposition eventually cuts off the meander forming an oxbow lake.

Levees

- levees are embankments of silt along the bank of a river

- Levees form along slow flowing rivers

- Every time a river leaves its channel sediment is deposited

1. Thickest and coarsest sediments deposited at channel edges. Thin and fine sediments deposited over outer parts of flood plain.
2. Natural levees are built up by many floods.

Delta

- Deposition occurs as the river loses velocity when it enters the sea

- Heaviest material is deposited first and the lightest last

- Distributaries form as the main river channel splits into smaller channels
