Mac vs. Windows The goals of innovating programming companies is to attract their ideal population of consumers in order to maximize profit for the success of the company. Microsoft and Apple both have and value a unique, revolutionizing method to maintain their fan base and attract new consumers to their side of the battlefield. Fortunately, for the consumer, this leads to competition, which in terms give the consumer a better value in order for companies to fight for society's dollar; thus, giving the consumer a wide variety of options for their preferred purchases. Despite these differences, the consumer also notice similar patterns and ways both Microsoft and Apple market their product, whether it is hardware or software. Therefore, although...show more content...

Despite Microsoft's and Apple's differences, there are multiple similarities for business and performance strategies to produce profit for each company. Microsoft and Apple are both in the smartphone, tablet, and software cloud-computing markets. In order to maximize profit, Microsoft and Apple created their own version of hardware and software to sell to consumers and also manages their own retailing store located at strategic locations for advertising proposes. Although Microsoft has different versions of programs, the performance and capabilities of their programs are similar in terms of the purpose that the program is being used for. For example, Microsoft both developed their own version of an internet browser: Microsoft use Windows Explorer and Apple use Safari, which are able to browse the internet for information equally despite different user interface according to David Kirkpatrick in his comparison article (David n.p.). Another example is Microsoft and Apple both use cloud-computing, which enable users to store information within a personal virtual storage unit and manage data in a smart, automatic
