

The Digestive System

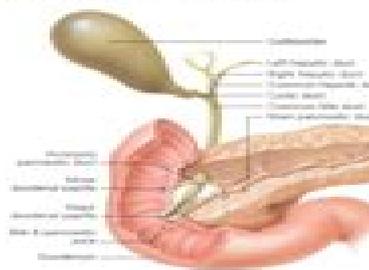

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is normally a muscular tube in which foods, liquids, and other nutrients are broken down into smaller molecules that can be absorbed into the bloodstream. The digestive system is made up of the mouth, salivary glands, stomach, small intestine, large intestine, rectum, and anus.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

The liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are accessory organs of the digestive system. The liver produces bile, which is stored in the gallbladder. The pancreas produces pancreatic juice, which is secreted into the small intestine. The gallbladder stores bile until it is needed to digest fats.

Layers of large intestine

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, ascending colon, transverse colon, descending colon, sigmoid colon, and rectum. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter.

Peristaltic action

This is a series of involuntary contractions that move food through the digestive system. It is a rhythmic, wave-like motion that pushes food forward through the digestive tract.

Rectum & anal canal

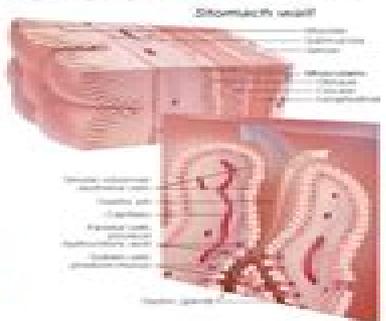

The mouth & salivary glands

The mouth is the beginning of the digestive system. Salivary glands produce saliva, which contains the enzyme amylase that begins the digestion of carbohydrates. The tongue is also involved in the process of swallowing.

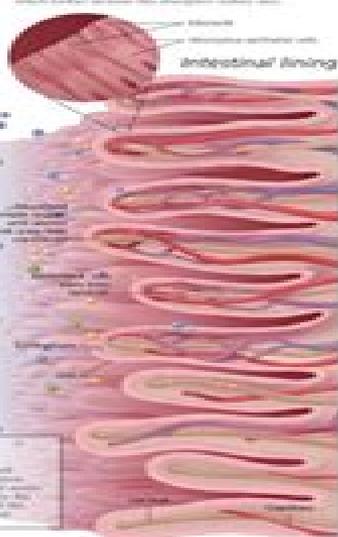

The stomach

The stomach is a muscular sac that stores and mixes food with gastric juices. It is responsible for the initial digestion of proteins. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, submucosa, muscle, and serosa.

Small intestine

The small intestine is the longest part of the digestive system. It is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. It is divided into three parts: the duodenum, jejunum, and ileum.

Absorption

The process of absorption occurs in the small intestine. Nutrients are absorbed through the villi, which are finger-like projections of the intestinal lining. The absorbed nutrients enter the bloodstream through the portal vein.
