

Chapter 11.1.3: Mechanics

October 2008 (AM)

Module 11: Practice Problems

11.1.1. Stressing Physics 11.1.3: Two Metal Slabs. Two metal slabs, one with width  $W_1$  and the other with width  $W_2$ , are being cut diagonally with respect to an interface. The slabs are being pulled together, and eventually a shear stress will break them across the interface.

(a) What is the area across which the slabs break?

(b) If the width of the interface is perpendicular to the slabs, and is  $L$ , and the slabs are supported from the ends by the string, at what angle is the shear stress on a surface of  $L$  width across the interface?

(c) What is the angle of the shear just before it breaks the bond?

(d) If the slabs are cut, how does the string support the load and keep the slabs together?

(e) In what way is this shear stress related to the shear stress in the slabs?

11.1.2. The Airplane problem by a force acting on a right triangle, given by

$$F = 2.0 \times 10^4 \text{ N}$$

which has both parallel components to the slabs. How does the magnitude of this force,  $F$ , vary with respect to the angle between the two slabs? Assume the slabs are pulled together, and eventually a shear stress will break them across the interface. How does the shear stress on a surface of  $L$  width across the interface vary with respect to the angle of the interface? Assume the slabs are pulled together, and eventually a shear stress will break them across the interface.

11.1.3. Stressing Physics 11.1.3: A force acting on a right triangle, given by the force  $F$  on the interface between the two slabs of the page. If the slabs are pulled together, and eventually a shear stress will break them across the interface, how does the shear stress on a surface of  $L$  width across the interface vary with respect to the angle of the interface? Assume the slabs are pulled together, and eventually a shear stress will break them across the interface.
