

I. Introduction

This paper addresses the question relating to how law enforcement balances competing needs to on the one hand, effect the reduction of crime and pursue the fight against terrorism, and on the other hand resist from becoming guilty of accusations relating to policing based on race, stereotyping, and discrimination. These are both valid claims and roles that the law enforcement authorities have to address at the same time and speaks of the challenges facing the authorities as they try to secure the peace while making sure not to trample on the civil, human and political rights of citizens. The paper includes a discussion on the key issues relating to the topic, as well as its history (The Leadership Conference on Civil and Human Rights, 2013).

II. History, Issues

It is to be noted that as early as 2002, formulations that balance the interests of states to protect the citizenry against acts of terrorism and against the proliferation of crimes on the one hand and the respect for human rights and the shunning of practices that lead to the trampling of such human rights such as racist policies and arbitrary and unequal application of the law have been in place in different parts of the world, including Europe. Conference of Ministers, 2002). On the other hand taking a step back, discussions on human rights and terrorism have historically not been framed as being on opposite sides of the fence, where such framing implies that advancing the interests of
