

Introduction to Mandala Drawing

By Cindy Angiel

Origin of the Mandala:

Mandala is a Sanskrit word that means "circle". In the Buddhist and Hindu religious traditions their sacred art often takes a mandala form.

Forms which are evocative of mandalas are prevalent in Christianity as well. The Celtic cross; the rosary; the halo; the aureole; oculi; the Crown of Thorns; rose windows; the Rosy Cross; and the dromenon on the floor of Chartres Cathedral. It is said that the dromenon represents a journey from the outer world to the inner sacred centre where the Divine is found.

In various spiritual traditions, mandalas are sometimes used for establishing a sacred space, and as an aid to meditation and trance induction.

Today's Mandala:

The word Mandala is now often used to describe symmetric images based on repeating patterns and circles within circles; images richer and more complex than a simple circle yet echoing the circle's elemental simplicity. However, not all mandalas use repeat pattern art or a series of circles tucked inside circles. Some are created using a mix of symbols or drawings personal to the maker of the mandala.

Because of the beauty found in the Mandala, its rich history and sacred symbolism - it's a terrific creative endeavor to use as an instrument of healing, self-awareness, or personal development while incorporating Line Weaving and "tangled" art.

For many people mandalas are the perfect combination of elements for personal growth or relaxation because of the line work and pattern making, quiet focus, precision, artful play, and a calmness where nothing else is going on except the occasional emergence of an unexpected design. A person can easily lose themselves in mandala making for hours or days. Some folks have even likened it to going on a personal retreat.

There are different types of mandalas such as those created for personal growth and spiritual connection, self healing mandala therapy art, Tibetan mandalas created using sand and semiprecious stones, mandalas in nature, and symbolic mandalas used many different religions.

Just as there are a variety of mandala types, there are also many different ways to create these beautiful creations as well. I've seen them made of glass, stones, corn fields, paint, clay, cement, sand and dirt, sticks, random objects, fabrics and yarns, even humans! Of course I've seen them made using pen and ink as well. Although I do favor mandalas made of sand and from rocks like the one I have created in my sunrise garden - the way I create most of my mandalas is on paper using pen and ink, using colored pencils to add color.

The rest of this document is about methods for creating mandalas by drawing them on paper, using Line Weaving patterns. However, to some extent, you could actually use similar steps to create them using other elements as well.

The tools used for the following methods are basically a sheet of paper, and something to draw with such as pencils, pens, markers, crayons, etc.
