

Fault finding

Fault finding is a disciplined and logical process in which 'trial fixing' should never be contemplated. The generalized process of fault finding is illustrated in the flowchart of Fig. 15.1. First you need to verify that the equipment really is faulty and that you haven't overlooked something obvious (such as a defective battery or disconnected signal cable). This may sound rather obvious but in some cases a fault may simply be attributable to maladjustment or misconnection. Furthermore, where several items of equipment are connected together, it may not be easy to pinpoint the single item of faulty equipment.

The second stage is that of gathering all relevant information. This process involves asking questions such as:

- In what circumstances did the circuit fail?
- Has the circuit operated correctly before and exactly what has changed?
- Has the deterioration in performance been sudden or progressive?
- What fault symptoms do you notice?

The answers to these questions are crucial and, once the information has been analysed, the next stage involves separating the 'effects' from the 'cause'. Here you should list each of the possible causes. Once this has been done, you should be able to identify and focus upon the most probable cause. Corrective action (such as component removal and replacement, adjustment or alignment) can then be applied before further functional checks are carried out. It should then be possible to determine whether or not the fault has been correctly identified. Note, however, that the failure of one component can often result in the malfunction or complete failure of another. As an example, a short-circuit capacitor will often cause a fuse to blow. When the fuse is replaced and the supply is reconnected the fuse will once again blow because the capacitor is still faulty. It is therefore important to consider what other problems may be present when a fault is located.
