

Frenchay Dysarthria Assessment

P. ENDERBY

Department of Speech Therapy, Frenchay Hospital, Bristol.

Summary

This paper describes the necessity for, and the development of an assessment for dysarthria. The short easy assessment described has been found to have acceptable inter-rater reliability, even between Speech Therapists who have not been trained to use the test. The clinical value of the test has been proven with its use with more than a hundred patients. However, there are several areas that point to the necessity of further research.

Introduction

The term "dysarthria" is used in the restricted sense to describe faulty pronunciation or speech deviation due to neuromuscular disorders. (Espir and Rose 1976). Despite this restriction, we are still discussing the most commonly acquired speech disorder.

It is surprising that, considering the frequency of occurrence of dysarthria, it has attracted little interest as is reflected in research or literature. This lack of initiative coupled with the dearth of treatise on the treatment of dysarthria is possibly associated with the absence of any standardised validated and reliable assessment.

Universally, the conventional method of assessment is one of description. This method can have little reliability or sensitivity as the adjectives used to describe the behaviour are not consistent between the pathologists. The descriptions of speech produced by patients with multiple sclerosis by different authors (Ivers and Goldstein 1963, Merritt 1967, Darley et al 1972) illustrates the problems of the different emphasis on varying characteristics of the speech produced.

Other methods of assessment currently used are Electromyographic studies (Dworkin 1979) Spectroanalysis and Panel Judgement. All of these are rendered impractical in a normal clinical situation by cost, equipment and time.

Present Study

The aims of the current work were to establish a reliable assessment for dysarthria. This will, it is hoped, promote greater interest in developing and evaluating treatment methods for this population. It could also ease the present difficulty of communicating case studies. The problems are obvious and make it difficult for therapists to recognize the pertinence of recommendations as the populations are poorly described. (Hartman et al 1979)
