addresses these issues The issues discussed centre on relationships within the firm e g between labour managers and investors and relationships outside the firm that affect consumers or the environment The essays in this collection are the considered selection by the editors and the contributors themselves of what are seen as some of the most weighty and urgent issues that connect the corporation and society at large in developed economies with established property rights The essays are to be read in dialogue with each other giving a richer understanding than could be obtained by shepherding all contributions into a single mould Nevertheless taken together they demonstrate a shared sense of deep concern that the corporate governance agenda has been and still is on the wrong track The contributors individually and collectively identify in this compendium both a research programme and a platform for change
