

External Ear

The external ear consists of the pinna (auricle) and the ear canal. The pinna is the visible part of the ear that collects sound waves and directs them into the ear canal. The ear canal is a tube that leads from the pinna to the eardrum (tympanic membrane).

The ear canal is lined with ceruminous glands that produce earwax (cerumen). Earwax helps to protect the ear canal from infection and keeps it moist. The ear canal also contains the ear drum, which is a thin membrane that vibrates in response to sound waves.

The middle ear is located in the temporal bone of the skull. It contains three small bones called ossicles: the malleus (hammer), the incus (anvil), and the stapes (stirrup). These bones are connected to each other and to the eardrum and the oval window of the cochlea.

The ossicles amplify the vibrations of the eardrum and transmit them to the cochlea. The cochlea is a spiral-shaped structure that contains the cochlear duct, which is filled with a fluid called perilymph. Inside the cochlear duct is the cochlear partition, which contains the organ of Corti.
