Unit 10: Plant Growth and Development

Unit Progress/Question: "Plants, which, unlike other organisms, are photosynthetic autotrophs and have a rigid cell wall, have evolved a variety of mechanisms to overcome the physical and chemical constraints that limit the transportation of water and nutrients, including having to move water through the soil to their roots."

Materials: 1 liter potted plant (with live growing), flashlight, ruler, soil

Procedure:

1. Set up the live plant and growing in direct light (sunlight) between 7am and 10am outside during winter or in the classroom and growing medium substituted with distilled water (not tap water) during the summer months in a growth chamber (with controlled light and temperature).
2. Measure the diameter of the stem of the water on 2 different days (morning and evening).
3. Make measurements from light microscope with a micrometer grid (attached to the grating) of a section (cutting the stem) prepared 2 weeks before using it for the light and dark stages. You will measure the diameter of the stem in a light stage and then in a dark stage. Use a micrometer with a scale of the same level as appropriate (mm).
4. Equation 1.
5. Measure the stem growth over the period of 2 weeks (dark and light) and compare the measurements. Measure growth (change in stem diameter) and enter the average.
6. Repeat the above with an additional one light and one dark stage and an extra control. Also, use a micrometer with a scale of the same level as appropriate (mm) and enter the measurements with units (mm) for diameter growth.
7. Use the same procedure for stem growth with a control and a dark stage (change in diameter) and a light stage (e.g., with another identical micrometer light or dark stage).
8. Take a photograph of your lab report including the lab report, measurement (with units) and take your notes down and then correct mistakes.
9. Review Student Laboratory
