PROPER FIELD CARRIES

Let's get started by showing you the field carries and in what situations they're most appropriate.

First up is the Trail Carry. This carry is good for maintaining balance, be warned though, it's not for every situation.

Now, because your firearm is pointed forward, this carry should not be used when walking behind someone.

Additionally, the firearm is pointing in a downward position, so use caution when walking in the snow or brush because debris could enter the barrel and we all know that's not good on firearms.

A good carry for long walks through open space is the Sling Carry. You want to keep a hand on the sling, so the firearm doesn't slide off your shoulder in the event you lose your balance.

This sling isn't for all situations, do not use it in thick brush because the firearm can easily be knocked off your shoulder or snag on branches.

The Elbow or Side Carry, this might be the most comfortable, but it offers the least amount of muscle control.

It isn't recommended when walking behind someone or if you are walking through brushy terrain.
