

but rather looks at the present status of the cash of a company. Hence, no credit is included in the cash flow statement. It is primarily determined on basis three components by which the cash enters and leaves a company: core operations, investing and financing. Cash flow is determined by looking at three components by which cash enters and leaves a company: core operations, investing and financing.

The Cash flow of a company is calculated by making certain addition and subtraction to the net income. These include the revenue, expenses and credit transactions, which appears in the balance sheet and the income statement. This is done because not all transactions are in cash. Example, depreciation is not a cash item and it does not actually result in the outflow of cash for the company, hence it is added back to the net income to get the actual picture of the cash flow statement. The cash flow statement shows the cash generated or expended during a specified time interval and its heading mentions the time frame. Example: "For the Three Months Ended September 30, 2006" or "The Fiscal Year Ended March 31, 2007".

A cash flow statement organizes and reports the cash generated and expended and is used in the following categories:

1. Operating activities – It contains the items reported on the income statement from the accrual basis of accounting to cash.
